GOING WILD | Do you want to change your perspective on landscapes, and yourself?

The course wild perspectives is an outdoor-based summer course around the theme of landscapes, land use and human-nature interconnectedness from a more than human, relational perspective. Through workshops, excursions and creative assignments students will learn about humans as actors in nature, about their own relations to the natural world and about the perspectives of other humans and non-humans in the landscape. We will work with theatre, writing and meditation techniques to stimulate transformative and relational learning. To experience the landscape from a wild perspective the week includes a two-day hiking and bushcrafting trip. On the last evening, students present their theatre performances or wild stories during a campfire session. Additionally, students reflect on their own transformative journey in an individual essay, using academic literature.

Want to join? Enroll via Osiris before the 7th of July!
